3) In 2020, 16 plaintiffs, ages 5 to 22, took the State of Montana to court for, they said, violating their right to a clean environment, which is enshrined in the state's constitution. This year, after a protracted court fight, they won. Held v. State of Montana is a first-of-its-kind case, but – given a rising generation of young activists who know the power of speaking their minds – it is unlikely to be the last. Claire, one of the plaintiff, grew up on a small farm in Montana, helping grow vegetables and raising livestock. So she has cared a lot about the land since she was little, but she really got into environmental work in middle school. Young activists are:

- A afraid of speaking their minds
- B not interested in speaking their minds
- C conscious of the power of speaking their minds
