- 8) Beware supermarket selling. Much research has been done by supermarket chains to find out how to persuade shoppers to buy more. Supermarkets are arranged to take advantage of the impulses of the people shopping in them - for example by putting sweets at checks-out in racks at children's eye-level. In general, you are likely to spend less shopping if you leave your children behind, if you have eaten recently and if you shop infrequently. They often use several techniques of persuasion to convince people to buy their products. The extract suggests that if you take your children to the supermarket:
A They will get in other shoppers' way
B They will encourage you to buy more
C It will take you longer to do your shopping
